

"Knowledge is Power"

A peer-led evaluation of the 'Our Rights, Our Communities' advocacy project

Who are we?

We are a group of women who received basic training, guidance and mentoring on research methods and analysis from a professional researcher at Glasgow Centre for Population Health.

What did we do?

We interviewed 16 women before and after the advocacy training that was part of the 'Our Rights, Our Communities' project.

What did the women tell us?

The women felt they needed more knowledge on women's rights and how systems work in Scotland.

Through the advocacy training, they learned what advocacy is and can achieve. Now they know how to protect others and themselves with all the tools they were given.

What will we do next?

We are using what we learned through this project to develop an advocacy network for Black, Asian and Minority Ethnic (BAME) people living in Glasgow - the 'Community Peer Advocacy project'.
